The effect of an intracerebroventricular injection of melittin on serum prolactin levels in male rats. The effects of intracerebroventricular (icv) injection of melittin on serum prolactin (PRL) levels in male rats were investigated. Melittin elevated serum PRL dose-dependently. The injection of melittin (100 micrograms/kg, icv) significantly increased the serum PRL level from 441.4 ± 85.2 to $1,064.0 \pm 186.0$ ng/ml after 60 min. The PRL levels returned to normal levels within 180 min in the brain. Melittin (100 micrograms/kg, icv) administration showed an average serum PRL level at 30 min after the injection which was not significantly different from PRL levels 30 min after saline injection. In contrast, the dopamine (DA)-depleting agents, chlorpromazine (50 mg/kg, ip) and haloperidol (0.5 mg/kg, ip), induced a significant elevation in the serum PRL concentration at 30 min after injection. The PRL-elevating effect of melittin was antagonized by pretreatment with haloperidol (0.5 mg/kg, ip). These results suggest that melittin activates the release of PRL from the pituitary gland, and this neuropeptide may regulate PRL release in the brain by regulating the dopaminergic system. Q: How do I calculate the gradient of a vector field when I'm given its components and not a function? I'm given a vector field \mathbf{F} , whose components are F_x , F_y and F_z . But I don't know any expression for the gradient of this vector field. How do I calculate the gradient of \mathbf{F} ? I can write the component field in components: $\mathbf{F} = F_x \hat{\mathbf{e}}_x + F_y \hat{\mathbf{e}}_y + F_z \hat{\mathbf{e}}_z$ And then proceed from there. But does this have to be done by
